What is the difference between a residual and a pecuniary gift?

A residual gift is a gift of the residue of an estate (i.e. what is left after debts, expenses and other bequests have been made) and it is usually expressed as a percentage. A pecuniary gift is a fixed sum of money left as gift in a Will. Making the Exodus Adventure Travels Foundation a residuary beneficiary will make the biggest difference to hard-to-reach communities across the globe because it will keep its value better than a gift of a fixed sum of money (pecuniary). A fixed sum will be affected by inflation over time.

One of the key differences, therefore, is that a pecuniary legacy enables you to specify exactly what value of gift you would like to leave, whereas a residuary legacy may be a way of ensuring that the value of your gift moves in line with inflation. Your independent legal advisor will be able to advise on the relative advantages of leaving a residuary versus leaving a pecuniary legacy.

Can I specify how my gift is spent?

You are welcome to express a wish of how your gift is spent however please keep in mind that we work with local partners to fund specific projects. Sometimes these projects continue for many years; sometimes they are wrapped up and taken over by the community much more quickly. It is therefore impossible to guarantee that, when your Will comes into effect, we will still be working with a specific partner or in a specific country. For this reason, we ask that you consider keeping your gift to The Exodus Adventure Travels Foundation unrestricted.
